RE-THINKING “ADOLESCENCE” TO RE-IMAGINE ENGLISH

Guest Editors: Sophia Tatiana Sarigianides, Mark A. Lewis, and Robert Petrone

Elisabeth Johnson Discusses Sex in the English Classroom

Tiffany Delaynes and Christopher Curmi Understand Youth as Cosmopolitan Intellectuals

Sharon Kane Wonders What It Might Have Been Like to Date Ben Franklin

Precocious Knowledge: Using Banned Books to Engage in a Youth Lens
Alyssa D. Niccolini

Sonnet for My First Period, Ninth-Grade Class
J. P. Murphy

David L. Bruce Re-constructs and Re-presents Teenagers with Media Literacy

Using a Youth Lens to Facilitate Literary Interpretation for “Struggling” Readers
Alison Heron-Hruby, Brandie Trent, Samantha Haas, and Zachary Cole Allen

And Much More . . .
7 Call for Manuscripts
11 From the Editors
  Julie Gorlewski and David Gorlewski
13 EJ in Focus
  How Re-thinking Adolescence Helps Re-imagine the Teaching of English
  Sophia Tatiana Sarigianides, Mark A. Lewis, and Robert Petrone
  In this framing article, the guest editors provide the theoretical framework for conceptualizing adolescence and adolescents driving this special issue of English Journal.
  They also describe what they call a youth lens, an approach for reading and analyzing young adult literature that honors the idea of adolescence as a construct.
19 Speaking My Mind
  DATING Ben Franklin: Investigating the Early Years of Historical Figures and Classic Authors
  Sharon Kane

RE-THINKING “adolescence” TO RE-IMAGINE ENGLISH

22 Precocious Knowledge: Using Banned Books to Engage in a Youth Lens
  Alyssa D. Niccolini
  This piece looks at how banned books can offer an illuminating glimpse into social constructions of “healthy” and “normal” adolescent development. Lineage with certain materials and topics in the secondary classroom can offer productive points of inquiry for both teachers and students.
29 Reading Pop Culture and Young Adult Literature through the Youth Lens
  Carlin Borsheim-Black
  This article describes activities and assignments for using a youth lens to critique dominant images of adolescents/teen in young adult literature and pop culture texts.
35 Disrupting and Dismantling the Dominant Vision of Youth of Color
  Susan L. Groenke, Marcelle Haddix, Wendy J. Glenn, David E. Kirkland, Detra Price-Dennis, and Chonika Coleman-King
  In this article, ELA and urban teacher educators who have been long-time advocates for and users of young adult literature in their work with beginning English teachers re-think the cultural constructs of “black and brown” adolescence that undergird the genre and guide their work.
41 Social Media and “Kids Today”: A Counter-Narrative from a US High School
  William Kist, Kristen Srnsen, and Beatriz Fontanine Bishop
  An incident of bullying via Twitter in a Midwestern U.S. high school problematizes traditional stereotypes about adolescents and social media, as witnessed by two English teachers at the school who write about their own experiences and implications for English curriculum and instruction.
47 Illuminating Discourses of Youth through the Study of First-Person Narration in Young Adult Literature
  Amanda Haertling Thein and Mark A. Sulzer Grounded in the three-part literary concept of the narrator, the narrative, and the implied reader, this article provides teachers and students with a heuristic for uncovering, attending to, and critiquing assumptions about youth found in the first-person narrative form that predominates in young adult literature.

continued
54 Using a Youth Lens to Facilitate Literary Interpretation for "Struggling" Readers
Alison Heron-Hruby, Brandie Trent, Samantha Haas, and Zachary Cole Allen
This article details the authors' success in using youth as a construct to facilitate literary analysis skills among high school students who claimed not to like reading and who demonstrated difficulty with reading comprehension. The authors provide descriptions of the analysis activities in which the students participated.

61 Sex in the English Classroom: Text, Counter Text, and Social Text
Elisabeth Johnson
In this article, the author is concerned with the ways conceptions of adolescence and sexuality take hold in and beyond the English curriculum. Through a classroom vignette, she considers some of the ways teachers might make more of moments when sex comes up and when planning interactions about sex with youth.

68 Re-constructing and Re-presenting Teenagers: Using Media Literacy to Examine Cultural Constructions of Adolescents
David L. Bruce
This article describes a class in which media literacy was used as a means for student inquiry into cultural constructedness of adolescents. Students read and critiqued media portrayals of teenagers, then used digital video to re-construct their own complex re-presentations of their adolescent selves.

75 Youth as Cosmopolitan Intellectuals
Tiffany DeJaynes and Christopher Curmi
Two high school teachers examine classroom moments that position youth as cosmopolitan intellectuals and invested community members as opposed to disengaged and disaffected adolescents.

POETRY

12 Claiming Spaces
Kjerst VanSlyke-Briggs

60 Hymn Sung at the Completion of the Lesson Plan, 11/12/13
Maria Fischer

67 Sonnet for My First-Period, Ninth-Grade Class
J. P. Murphy

84 Teachable Moment
Maria Sanchez

COLUMNS

81 A Thousand Writers: Voices of the NWP
The Serious Work of Writing
Anna Smith

85 Carpe Librum: Seize the (YA) Book
Will You Go Out with Me? Why First Loves Are Painfully Important to YA Lit
Emilee Hussack and Pauline Skowron Schmidt

88 Soft(a)ware in the English Classroom
Reassessing How We "See" Students: The Blessing and Blight of Rubrics
(and Software) in Education
Tom Liam Lynch

91 Speaking Truth to Power
Speaking Out in the Public Sphere: Why, What, Where, and How Teachers Can Enter the Fray
Peter Smagorinsky

97 Under Discussion: Teaching Speaking and Listening
Care to Elaborate: Encouraging Students to Build on Others' Ideas
Lisa M. Barker